The Old Roman Republic.

The age in which Cicero lived politics was no doubt highly interesting, but it did not tend toward the establishment of longevity in those who engaged in it. Well for the politician who was able to call his head his own until he reached middle age. It was not the exciting and at times amusing and pleasant game played in modern times, with ballots and newspapers. Then it was carried on with bludgeons and dirks. Politicians went about the streets clad in mail armor, and followed by clients, as they were called, in crowds, who went armed and were hired for the express purpose of smashing heads and raising riots in the forum and in public assemblages. If the local politicians could not be bought, they were killed. Bribery and murder were the adjuncts of a successful political campaign. Candidates for the Consulships bankrupted themselves and their friends to get the money to be used for bribing retainers and paying thugs and assassians, promising payment when the time should come that, having passed through the Consulship, they should be assigned to the Governorship of the Province, where, by systematic robbery and pillage, they should obtain enough to return to Rome, pay their debts, buy the Judges who should try them in the event that they should be so unfortunate as to be arraigned at the bar of justice (?) as public plunderers by some outraged Province, and still have sufficient left to retire into opulent and honored privacy.

From small beginnings the nation had grown vigorous and strong and valiant, until her name was feared and her arms were as terrible in conflict as those of the iron regiments of Puritans, that Cromwell turned loose upon the continent to vindicate the majesty of England. Always at war, her citizens were her bred soldiers, and thus Rome became pre-eminently a warring and warlike nation. But once during the time of the Republic were the gates of the temple of Janus closed. War had made the Republic great, and war, constant and exacting of life and treasure, sustained her control over her immense dependencies.

The effect of this sort of national education was that the successful military leaders, the Scipios and the Sullas, were worshiped as demi-gods, and vested with authority over the destiny of the nation that no King ever possessed. Their word was law and their will destiny. From the decrees there lay no appeal save to the God of Battle. At the time of the birth of Cicero and Caesar the government was in name a Republic, but it had degenerated into a miserable oligarchy of the worst and most cruel form. There was the Senate composed of patricians, and there were still tribunes, aediles, quaestors, praetors, in name, chosen from the representatives of the people; but they were without authority, other than that little they received through the gracious pleasure of whatever military dictator happened to be in the ascendant. In Cicero's youth the bloody contest between Marius and Sulla had divided Rome into factions, that shed her best blood in causeless and inhuman strife.

The death of Marius who himself had once been dictator, left the absolute control of the government in the hands of Sulla, who had, if not the shadow in the name of King, at least the substance of dominion without it. His wish was law, absolute and unchallenged. Senate consuls, tribunes, judges, all did exactly as he bid them. He signalized the beginning of his rule by prescribing the lives and property of 5,000 citizens. He ordered them not to be tried for offenses alleged to have been committed, but that they should be slaughtered wherever found, because they had been friends and followers of Marius. It came to be that anyone who desired the life and property of his enemy had but to obtain the placing of his name openly or surreptitiously upon the prescribed list and immediately he was massacred. For nearly a year this fearful carnival continued, and when at last the day came when it was declared the slaughter should cease, the tyrant who had caused it, wiping his bloody lips, sat himself down to arrange and complete a code of laws to govern this Republic; and after engaging three years in this work of legal reform, as he called it, this Republican monster resigned his place as dictator, and was allowed to retire in peace, with honor, to private life—where he engaged himself, when not debauching, in writing his memoirs of which he had just completed the twenty-second volume when he died.

A beautiful Republic, and a fine lot of Republicans surely. The only thing about it Republican was that the nobles and patricians stood an equal, yes, a better chance with the plebeians of losing their heads at the hands of the Republican tyrants. And this is the Republic, and these the Republican institutions that the admirers of Cicero say he was trying to perpetuate and save to the Roman people from the treason of Caesar. —Charles W. Baker in Cincinnati Commercial.

Singular Accidents.

If one wishes to verify the saying that "truth is stranger than fiction" he needs but to carefully examine the files of daily newspapers for a few days. He may select almost any topic, and in a short time he will be able to make a collection of incidents bearing upon it that will prove to be both curious and interesting. To illustrate this fact, take the various ways in which certain persons have been killed or injured during the past year, as described in our columns and in exchanges.

During the flood a steamboat ran against the balcony of a house at Kansas City, Mo., and crushed to death a man who was sitting upon it. James Little, of Canton, Ohio, drank some cold beer, which paralyzed his stomach, resulting in almost immediate death. Two young men in Adair County, Mo., agreed to be photographed with pistols drawn on each other. The artist, while arranging the position of one of the pistols, accidentally discharged it, and the ball entered the lungs of one of the sitters. Thomas J. Wharton, of St. Louis, took up a large oyster and said: "This is the kind of an oyster Walter Brooks choked to death on," tried to swallow it and choked to death. Mike Maroney entered a core oven in a foundry at Pittsburg, to warm himself. Another workman, not knowing that Maroney was inside the oven, placed a core on the truck, ran it in, closed the door, and roasted him alive. John Thompson and his brother tried to stop a dog fight at Green Ridge, Penn., the latter throwing a stone which, missing the animals, smashed his brother John's skull. John Lafinhuski, of Nanticoke, Penn., broke a bottle of whisky in his pocket, saturating his clothes. He soon afterward lit a match, when his clothes took fire, and he was fatally burned. While on parade at West Point, Lieutenant Archibald Gibson was prevented for a whole hour from lifting his hand to remove a spider from his ear. At the conclusion of the parade his ear was full of blood. The insect was not removed for two days, and Gibson finally died of inflammation of the brain.

A Sheriff's posse surrounded the residence of a desperate thief at Pine Bluff, Ark. The thief jumped from a window and ran for the woods, with a crowd after him, the fleetest of whom, being mistaken by the next fleetest for the thief, was shot by him. As the Rev. Mr. Petrey, of Rock Castle, Ky., was entering his home he was followed by a hen, which perched upon a hanging rifle. The rifle, being jostled out of position, fell, striking on the lock, and was discharged, killing the minister. A boy named Bourt, at Dover Court, England, while eating some preserves, swallowed the sting of a wasp and died before he reached the doctor's. Louis Garthwait was lowering a forty-pound torpedo of nitro-glycerine into a well at Rixford, Pa., when the well made a sudden flow, struck the torpedo, and it exploded, blowing him to pieces. A chimney swallow filled the muzzle of a gun of Mr. William Suggs, of Dublin, Ga., with clay, and when he discharged it the weapon blew off his hand. A friend of Lieutenant W. A. Moore at Creedmoor snapped a cherry pit at him, which struck the optic nerve of his eye, causing paralysis and congestion of the brain, and he narrowly escaped death. An old man at Louisville aimed a kick at his wife, but lost his balance, fell, and was fatally injured—a lesson to wife-beaters.

Were a novelist to present such an array of accidents as happening to his characters he would be laughed at, and yet every one of them actually occurred. —Cincinnati Commercial.

The Dream That Frightened a Woman.

A lady in Bath was much alarmed by dreaming that some one was holding her wrist. Vainly endeavoring to scream for assistance, she succeeded at length in whispering just loud enough to awake herself. After a few minutes relief, at being no longer under the influence of the dream, she became conscious that some one was really holding her left wrist, and all her strength was inadequate to release it. Whether to call her hostess or not was easily decided, for her terror rendered her as speechless as she had been before awakening. It could not be that any friend had seized her wrist in sport; it was too rigid a clasp, and had been continued some time, for her left hand was cold and numb. But just as she should be able to speak, in a moment she found the relentless grasp was that of her own right hand, and not easy to withdraw from its own companion, so desperate had become its hold. —Bath (Me.) The Land Question In England.

The agitation of the land question in Ireland has extended to England and Scotland, and is an agitation that is taxing to its utmost the statesmanship of Great Britain. The lands in those countries are owned almost entirely by lords and noblemen, who inherited them, and have lived extravagantly upon the incomes. The rents paid by tenants were enormously high, and were usually measured by the ability of those who occupied and worked the lands to pay. The rents ranged from $5 to $10 per acre, according to location. These enormous rents occupants were able to pay, because of the high prices of agricultural products, but the competition of the United States made farming in the United Kingdom unprofitable, and hence a demand for a reduction in rents, and hence, also, the excitement prevails in Ireland, and which is extending to England and Scotland. Land owners have hoped against hope for years. They tried to persuade themselves that the competition from this country would last but for a season, and under this delusion they tried to maintain high rents. It was a delusion.

The increase in and the magnitude of the exports of agricultural products from this country exceed the most extravagant estimates. The figures for a few articles for 1870 and 1881 compare as follows:

| | 1870. | 1881. |
|--------------------|--------------|---------------|
| Wheat | $41,171,229 | $167,693,485 |
| Corn | 1,287,475 | 50,702,639 |
| Provisions | 29,175,539 | 151,528,268 |
| Live animals | 1,045,639 | 16,412,398 |

The total value of agricultural products exported during the past fiscal year amounted to $729,650,016. The value of these exports constituted 82.55 per cent. of the entire value of domestic merchandise from the United States.

To facilitate these exports the charge for inland transportation in the United States has largely decreased. As railroad facilities between the seaboard and the West have increased, the costs of transportation has diminished.

Thus it is seen the lands of the United Kingdom are brought into close competition with those of the United States; and no more can a farmer in England, Scotland and Ireland pay $5 to $10 or $20 per acre for the use of lands than could our farmers pay such sums less the cost of shipping the products. The lands of Texas, which can be bought outright for $1 to $5 per acre, are now, by reason of rapid and cheap transit, in close competition with those of Great Britain. The man who pays a rent of five dollars per acre in the latter, it is therefore perfectly plain, can not compete with the farmer in this country who owns his land. The question, then, is how much can the farmers of the United Kingdom afford to pay? This is to be regulated, not by the wants of landlords, but the cost of delivering agricultural products in that country from the United States. It is manifest, therefore, that the days of colossal incomes from lands in Great Britain are numbered.

The London Times, discussing this contingency, said it would revolutionize English society; and it will. The landlords who spend from $50,000 to $500,000 a year will be forced to abandon that style of living, and to adopt what we call in this country republican simplicity. The competition of this country which has revolutionized agricultural interests and cheapened the value of lands in that country is permanent. Our exports may vary with the harvests, but they are always bound to be large, and large enough to insure moderate prices in the English markets. There is no way Parliament could aid the landlords except by putting a duty upon imports; but England is a republican monarchy, and any attempt to tax the bread and meat of the people would shake the throne to its foundations. Landlordism will be modified, if not broken up, and this will prove a good thing for the country and its people. A landed aristocracy is a curse to any people, and it certainly cannot stand up in competition with the landed system of the United States, where those who till the soil own their farms. —Cincinnati Gazette.

Cornish Prayer Meetings.

Many of the expressions used at Cornish prayer-meetings are extremely grotesque. For example, hardly any but a native would understand what a man meant when he prayed that he might be kept "from skirmishing into the holes and corners." This was simply the man's way of asking that he might be kept from doing anything wrong. Again, it is rather trying to one's gravity to hear a man allude to a certain unmentionable personage as "ould smutty face." About the time I heard this remark, and in the same parish, there was a good deal of rivalry between the Dissenting fishermen and those attending the church. The former annoyed the latter intensely by accusing them of praying at their meeting that "the devil might be hanged." Less primitive people would have laughed at such an absurd charge, but our friends regarded it quite seriously, and one of them took occasion to allude to it thus in his prayer: "They have been saying that we prayed that the devil might be hanged!" I mention this to show how unsophisticated these men are. They are wont to be very personal in their prayers. One evening a man brought two of his comrades with him, and in his prayer put forth this petition: "Lord, convert they two men over there in the corner." —London Society.

WHOEVER SAW the grave of a bad man? Peek of the Milwaukee Sun, says, when a man lives so mean a dog won't follow him the inscription on his tomb always reads "Asleep in Jesus." He wants a society organized to prevent lying on tombstones.

THE persecution to which the Hebrews of Russia have been subjected recently by the brutal population by which they are surrounded in various localities has had the effect of creating for them in this country, as well as in England, a widespread sympathy.

IMMIGRATION is still on the increase. The arrivals at New York for the month of January were 11,242 against 8,032 for the corresponding month last year, an increase of $3,160. This is the slack season, but the increase indicates that the arrival of immigrants during the year will be in excess of all previous years.

THE prohibitory law which provides a punishment for drunkenness in Kansas, has been declared inoperative by the Supreme court in that state, on the ground that the provision was not named in the title of the bill. Until the defect in the law is remedied, any person who chooses may in that state get drunk with impunity, and under the decision he may lawfully, in spite of prohibition, drink any liquor he has come by legally or give it away to any of his thirsty friends. In Kansas, at least, prohibition does not prohibit.

THE immediate appropriation bill now before Congress appropriates $1,437,283, of which the following are the most important items: Public printing, $400,000; Indian service (principally for Sioux), $418,000; transportation of coin and bullion, $50,000; construction of vaults in treasury, $75,000; clerical force in patent office, $25,000; clerical force in pension office, $75,000; under fish commission, $77,000; postoffice department, $100,000, repairing executive mansion, $23,000. The Military Academy appropriation bill recommends an appropriation of $318,857, which is $100,717 less than the estimates and $3,578 less than the amount appropriated the current year.

JUSTICE HUNT is to be retired from the Supreme Court on a salary of ten thousand dollars a year for the balance of his life. He has a fair chance of living at least twenty years longer which will give him two hundred thousand dollars for doing nothing. Judge Hunt came on the bench of the Supreme Court in 1872, and discharged his duties as judge for about six years, and for the last three years has been wholly disabled from paralysis. He still draws his salary and declines to resign. By the action of congress he is to retire on his salary so as to allow someone to be appointed who will discharge the duties of the office. This is the national and inevitable sequence of the life tenure of office. Is there vigor and integrity enough among the people to correct it by an amendment of the constitution? We fear not. But let the question be made at once and brought directly before the people next fall. A specified term of office, against a life tenure with an endless list of retired pensioners on the national treasury, that is the question. What say the people in their majesty? If worthy old gentlemen are to be supported at the public expense after a certain age, let it be ascertained on principles of justice who shall constitute this favored class. It certainly will not be those gentlemen of large fortunes who have been favored with high and lucrative offices till a certain age, Justice, equality and charity would cry out against this.

This would be the first great step. We would stew the missionaries, and after a time put a little mutton in the stew—not enough to excite the suspicion of the cannibal, but just enough to get him in the habit of eating mutton without knowing it. Day after day we would put more mutton and less missionary, until, finally, the cannibal would be perfectly satisfied with clear mutton."

Ventilated Egg Case.

Patented February 15, 1881.

Indispensable to Merchants Shippers and Producers.

The outside frame of this carrier contains five trays, held in place by fasteners at end of case, as seen in cut. These Trays are constructed in reversible halves. The above cut shows one whole tray filled ready to be placed in case, each egg resting in its cardboard socket in such a manner as to be readily counted, candied, or transferred from tray to tray, or case to case, without rehandling. For cold storage this case will store 60 dozen with racks made to receive the half trays, hence this is the cheapest storage case manufactured, saving largely in space. The manner of holding the eggs on end prevents oscillation, adding, or breakage, and adds greatly to their freshness when carried long in storage. Size of 30 dozen No. 1 cases 25x12x14, weighs 20 pounds.

Hall's New Sulky Plow.

This implement, which combines all the excellencies of the latest improvements in Sulky Plows, is destined to become one of the farmer's most valuable mechanical aids. It has been thoroughly tested and has met with ready and general approval wherever tried. The following certificate bears testimony to the excellence of the work. The names attached are those of gentlemen well-known in this county.

We the undersigned, were witnesses of the field test made at the Maysville Fair grounds, of Mr. James H. Hall's sulky plow, as well as of his several walking plows to which premium were awarded for their superior make and efficient operation in the ground. It gives us great pleasure to certify, that the sulky plow is the very best implement of the kind we have ever seen, and has advantages over all others, in the ease with which it is handled, and the simplicity with which it is constructed. The superior quality of the material of which it is made and its lightness of draft and the perfection of its work. We can say also, that we have never seen plows of any make or quality which surpassed the walking plows exhibited by Mr. Hall, to which premiums were awarded. They were so constructed as to work with the lightest draft, and do the work of turning the soil with ease and perfection. There is something in the shape and design of the mold-boards of all these plows, which adapt them admirably for the work to which they are designed, and serve to show that the proprietor, has hit the exact scientific principle, and applied it successfully. — THOS. The Spring meeting of the Maysville Trotting Club will be held at the course near this city, beginning May 16th and continuing four days. The ten-mile running race by Miss Nellie Burke, of Omaha, Nebraska, and Miss Taylor, of San Francisco, for a purse of $1,000 a side has been arranged for the first day, and will doubtless attract a large concourse of people to the city. It will be one of the most exciting turf events that ever occurred in this state, and one that is not likely to be witnessed here again soon. Rooms For Rent.

Ensign's Comedy Company who come to Maysville with the highest press recommendations, will appear at the opera house this evening in the farcical comedy "Rooms For Rent," which had such a continued run in all the larger cities this season. It is really an excellent company and the play is one of the most amusing of the day. It is funny from beginning to end and all will enjoy it who see it. Seats may be reserved at Harry Taylor's news depot.

The New York World says.
The above farcical comedy was greeted last night with a very large and enthusiastic audience. The piece is very funny, the situations, which follow rapidly one upon the other, are so extremely laughable in their absurdity that roars of laughter greet the efforts of the performers as they proceed to unravel the entanglements. The plot of the comedy is of the lightest kind, yet there is enough of it to cause the usual interest to be taken by the audience in the solution of the mistaken love affairs of the tenants of the "Rooms for Rent." The several members of the company personated their respective roles in an exceptionally clever manner and spared no pains to keep the audience happy and amused. Where all did so well it is hard to particularize, yet we should not be doing justice if we did not make special note of the able impersonations of "Cleveland," the landlord of "Rooms for Rent," by Mr. Thomas Chapman, "Henry Huedelman," the author and actor, by Mr. Beers, and "Dahl," the dancing master, by Mr. Holst. Of the ladies, Miss Genevieve Reynolds, "Mlle. Rosvella," the operatic singer, was not repaid in every sense, while Miss Lizzie Fletcher's "Miss Julia Carter" was all that could be desired. In fact, those who wish to enjoy a good hearty two hours' laugh and get rid of the blues should go to the Academy and see "Rooms for Rent."

Life in an Esquimau Hut.

The correspondent who accompanied the Arctic expedition of Lieut. Greeley, gives this graphic account of the interior of an Esquimau hut, and the every-day costume of its mistress:

At Proven a better opportunity for studying the habits of the primitive Esquimaux was afforded than at any other place we have visited. The whalers and exploring parties seldom visit it and the influence of the white man is less perceptible. They retain their habits of life as practiced before they improved their condition, to a greater extent than in other parts of Greenland. I spent four hours consecutively in one of their attractive "igloos," or huts. My pretext for so protracted a stay was ostensibly awaiting the completion of cap of eider down, on which one of the squaws was engaged. The hut was built of turf, moss and stone, and was entered by a long, narrow low passage or tunnel—so low that I was compelled to crawl on hands and feet, a most disagreeable and humiliating proceeding, as the dogs and natives (not much better in point of cleanliness) also have ingress and egress through the same vestibule. On reaching the small interior hole, which was living, eating and sleeping room, the first glance discovered the mistress of the house in an extremely airy costume, sitting on the shelf or platform on which they sleep. By due process of barter a neckerchief that I had worn was transferred to the possession of the squaw in exchange for eider cap to which I referred, and which she at once proceeded to make, first measuring the dome of my intellect with great precision. The room was too low to admit of standing upright. No stove or fireplace appeared; as a substitute was a hollowed stone, used as a lamp, with seal oil for fuel and moss for a wick. The atmosphere of the room was stifling and extremely nauseating from the odor of sealskins strewn around. The sleeping arrangements were most simple. A platform about two feet high and extending from the wall about six feet occupied one side of the room. This is the receptacle of skins and furs during the day, and when the natives retire they make it a general couch, each disciple of Morpheus drawing over himself or herself so many of the skins as are necessary for comfort. The costume of the Esquimaux women is so nearly like that of the men that at first glance it is difficult to distinguish the sexes. The women, however—as all the world over—dress in a more pleasing manner than the men. The costume generally consists of a pair of dainty boots of dressed seal-skin, stained different colors and ornamented with small pieces cut in fancy forms which reach above the knee. Then come the pantaloons, or trunks, also of seal-skin, but with hair on. These are short, reaching hardly half way down the thigh, where they meet the boots or leggings. The upper part of the body is covered by a loose fitting cassock, or smock, devoid of buttons, which is pulled on over the head. An attached hood can be drawn over the head or allowed to fall back on the shoulders at pleasure. A pair of the aforementioned trunks, or pantaloons, was the only part of the costume that the dusky maker of my cap saw fit to wear. She appeared to work with greater facility, however, than if trammelled with clothing, as she deftly held the materials in position with her toes while she trimmed or fitted them. Two or three children were hanging about her without seeming to impede her progress in the least. As soon as completed she placed the cap on my head, and proved at once the possession of at least one quality in common with her more civilized sisters, of being able to flatter by showing in gestures and expressions great admiration, but whether for her handiwork or our appearance we could not determine, but I was at once reminded of the remark of the descendant of Israel: "It fits you like de paper on de wall." I was indeed glad to escape from the unfragrant place. The single window was made of membranous tissue of the stomach of the seal. This substance when oiled became almost as transparent as glass. Many of the natives, however, live in much better dwellings than the one I have described. Such a one represents the habitations of the poorer class.

Who Can Beat This?

The Keokuk Gate City has unearthed the meanest man on record, and locates him at Burlington. The story, as the paper mentioned tells it, is that while a deaf, dumb and blind hand-organist was sleeping on the postoffice corner the wretch stole his instrument and substituted a new-fangled churn therefor; and when the organist awoke he seized the handles of the churn and ground away for dear life, and when the "shades of night were falling fast," that meanest man in the world came around, took his churn, restored the organ to its owner and carried home four pounds of creamery butter.

Gave it Up.

The custom of appointing young lawyers to defend pauper criminals, says the San Antonio (Tex.) Herald, received a setback in our District Court. His Honor, Judge Noonan, had appointed two young lawyers to defend an old and experienced horse-thief. After inspecting his counsel for some time in silence, the prisoner rose in his place and addressed the bench: "Air them to defend me?" "Yes, sir," said His Honor. "Both of 'em?" inquired the prisoner. "Both of them," responded the Judge. "Then I plead guilty," and the poor devil took his seat and sighed heavily.
